“My name is Solomon Masina. I am a security guard and I am going to vote for the National Party.

So are hundreds of other young men like me, who reject the violence of the ANC and believe the NP will restore law and order.

When I was young I joined one of the ANC front youth movements – but I left it because of the violence. They wanted us boycott the schools, to stop teachers teaching – to smash the system.

But I could not see the point of it. Why did there have to be all that violence? What did it achieve? We were only harming ourselves really. So I left. I just felt I couldn’t go along with them any more.

I think I was unhappy with it because it clashed with my Christian beliefs. My parents had always taught me that violence was wrong and to believe in standards and discipline.

These are the sort of values which the NP upholds. But the ANC has actually promoted an atmosphere of lawlessness.

They and their comrades run wild in the townships terrorising people and intimidating them – and putting themselves above the law.

So it is no wonder that other people look at them and think it is OK to break the law too.

I have been a security guard for six years now and I have seen enough of crime and criminals to know that much of the trouble we have comes from this. And I blame the ANC for it.

If you don’t have law and order, you have nothing left in this world. I don’t think the ANC realise what the damage they have done – especially to their own people.

It has got so bad now that most people have had enough. They want an end to all the stealing and the violence and the intimidation.

And that is why people of all races are turning to the NP. They believe that only the NP can end the violence. And I think they are right.

That is what drew me to the NP. When I realised we were going to have the elections I sat down and thought what were the most important issues to me. Violence came on top - easily. Then I thought which party was most likely to solve the problem - and the NP was the only answer.

If the NP win the election – and then they manage to control the violence – then, maybe my job won’t be necessary any more.

If that is so – and the violence is ended – I shall be happy to have voted myself out of a job!”
