COLOSSEUM.

The Hermann Goering Buna Werke has been the object of the R.A.F.'s attentions many a time.

Now it has been blitzed again, this time for Michael Balcon's new economic warfare film, "The Big Blockade," opening at the Colosseum on Saturday, and which Ealing Studios have made with the co-operation of the Ministry of Economic Warfare.

The scene is one in the office of the Buna Werke's managing director, played by Alfred Drayton. A terrific explosion had to be created—and the sound stage used was the one which was actually bombed not long ago.

A real factory fire—accidental, curiously enough, and not one that Goering's bombers caused—helped the film-makers.

PLAZA.

Bringing to life the memorable biography,
"The Vanishing Virginian," by Rebecca Yancey Williams, the film adaptation from Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer is now showing at the Plaza Theatre.

Frank Morgan appears in the title role as Cap'n Bob Yancey, father of the author.
Spring Byington is the wife and mother.

The writer is portrayed in her girlhood by Kathryn Grayson.

There is no plot, in the accepted sense, but the narrative reveals the everyday life of a typical American family. Romance enters when the sisters fall in love with two dashing young blades who receive the blessings of Cap'n Bob.

Oudtshoorn Literary Circle.

An interesting meeting took place on July 12th when Mr. A. Immerman lectured on "Eternal Truth" and Mr. M.
Wolozinsky, M.A., delivered a thought-provoking address on the literary works of Herzl, Bialik and Jabotinsky, whose immortal works shall never die. Various poems of Bialik were very ably read by Mr. R. Rollnick, Mrs. I. J. Kahn and Mrs.
M. Wolozinsky.

At a previous meeting Mr. R. Rollnick lectured on Peretz Smolenskin, and Mrs.
S. Rechtman on Jewish Literature.
