

Mrs. Monica Bray said, "We folk-singers are very upset and concerned about this attack. We are worried that the end of folk-singing might be in sight."

The action among the members of the coffee-bar audiences to whom I spoke was consistently one of concern. The majority took the attack on them seriously.

Miss G. Warrington, sitting at a table with four of her middle-aged friends, said: "The coffee-bars of Hillbrow are patronised by people from all age-groups. My friends and I frequent them because it is a pleasant and relaxing way to spend an evening listening to talented young folk-singers."

"All the young people we have come into contact in these places have been decent, respectable and well-behaved young people."
