

Thermometer of Justice

This graph, reading chronologically from the bottom, shows the number of people who have died in detention over the last 20 years. Notable features include the cessation of deaths for four years after the outcry which followed the death of Ahmed Timol in 1971; a sharp increase probably associated with the many detentions after the Soweto riots in 1976; and a decrease after the much-publicised death of Steve Biko.
