ZUID-AFRIKAAN

CAPE TOWN, NOVEMBER 7, 1915.

The die is cast and the long dreaded general emigration from the land of Natal, now appears to be a matter of what, not the least doubt remains.

The madness which attended the original expatriation from the colony, appears once more to have seized the general mind of the unfortunate Emigrants.

The underflowing extract from the Natalist of the 28th September, containing this painful intelligence, will surely fill every tender heart with sincere grief.

We readily admit that the reasons above referred to, contain just grounds for complaint; but we cannot bring our mind to consider them both adequate and sufficient for adopting the rash step which the Emigrants again contemplate.

It is certainly not to be denied that the inexplicable delay and the constant wavering to which our rulers have accustomed themselves with respect to the affairs of Natal, in spite of the most humble, but at the same time, most urgent representations of the unfortunate Emigrants, have contributed much, nay, very much, to the adoption of this desperate resolution.
