staff of the "S.A. JEWISH CHRONICLE" for the past half dozen years. The occasion was the nuptials of Miss Pauline Apter and Mr. Louis Sarkin and the ceremony took place at Jeppetown Shool. The bride, who looked charming, wore a lovely dress of ivory satin and georgette, skirt with side draperies of georgette embroidered with pearls. The corsage was of satin, with short waisted effect and was also hand embroidered with pearls and had long bell shaped transparent sleeves.

She was attended as Untefuhrers by her father and mother, the latter being dressed in a charming confection of brown, while Mr. and Mrs. Nathan Sarkin performed a similar service to the bridegroom. The bride's three sisters acted as bridesmaids, while her brother was the best man. The former wore gowns of crêpe de chine each of dainty shades, one pale mauve, one shell pink and one pale blue. These dresses were simply and artistically made, the bodices being short waisted and hand embroidered in the different shades of each dress, with long transparent georgette sleeves. There was at the Shool and the service was orchestral. At its conclusion the wedding party proceeded to the Selborne Hall where the reception was held and where bride and bridegroom and their relatives received the felicitations of a very large circle of friends. When the four or five hundred ladies and gentlemen who were present, were seated, the toast of the bride and bridegroom was proposed by the Rev. H. Lipschitz who paid a tribute to both bride and bridegroom and, to the cordially received toast, Mr. Sarkin suitably responded. Dancing was indulged in for two or three hours before the pleasant afternoon was concluded and after a family dinner the bride and bridegroom left for the Cape on their honeymoon. The numerous and costly presents testified to the respect and esteem in which both parties are held and the occasion was remarkable for quite an extraordinary number of handsome cheques.

I suppose you are terribly busy getting ready for Yomtov so I am not going to keep you long reading my letter, but in case you feel like a entree for Rosh Hashona dinner, I can tell you of a very tasty one. It is called.

"SWEETBREAD GLACE, SAUCE JARDINIÈRE WITH SPAGHETTI."

Put on some poultry drippings to heat in a saucepan, cut up an onion, shredded very fine and then put up in sweetbreads, which have been picked over carefully and lain in salt water an hour before boiling. Salt and pepper the sweetbreads before putting in the kettle, slice two tomatoes on top and cover up tight and set on the back of stove to simmer slowly. Turn once in a while and add a little soupstock. Boil one-half cup of string beans, half a can of canned peas, one-half cup of currants, cut up extremely fine, with a tablespoon of drippings a little salt and ground ginger. When the vegetables are tender add to the simmering sweetbreads. Thicken the sauce with a teaspoon of flour. Have the sauce boiled down quite thick. Boil the spaghetti in salted water until tender. Serve with the sweetbreads.

With love,

Yours,

GWEN.

Writing under date of August 31st, Miss Marie Tempest addressing herself to the Editor, says: "Will you allow me to thank the "SOUTH AFRICAN JEWISH CHRONICLE" through your kind offices, for the exceedingly charming gift, which I appreciate very much indeed."

The Students' Musical Magazine.

An extremely artistic and useful little publication is edited by Mr. Hermann Becker, the well-known Violoncellist. It aims at instructing musical and art students in the lesser known branches, such as the metaphysical and psychological standpoint of that art. It seeks to establish a unanimity of spirit amongst students, and to broaden the artistic outlook. Such a publication deserves every support, and the "S. A. JEWISH CHRONICLE" heartily recommends it to all seekers of the beautiful in life. It is published on the 1st of each month.
