ASTORIA KINEMA.

"At the Villa Rose," which commences at the Astoria Kinema to-morrow, has a strongly dramatic story, tense in its interest, full of variety and with an abundance of comedy, and is so well constructed that the mystery is kept up to the end. Austin Trevor, as Hanaud, gives a remarkably good performance. His fine presence and easy style command interest, and he gives point and variety to an effective part. Norah Baring wilts effectively as the persecuted heroine, and Richard Cooper gives an enjoyable impression of the "silly ass" character.
