

"God Would Resign"

If There was a "Jewless Universe"

A DISTINGUISHED British journalist recently addressed the Anglo-Palestinian Club of London on the not quite millennial prospect of "A Jewless World." While we cannot be expected to regard with equanimity the ideal of our extinction, even as a theoretical proposition, there are many crazy fanatics who seem to think that heaven would be at hand under such a dispensation. The lecturer tried to picture this "brave new world" as Jewless. The first result, he declared, if his assumption ever came to pass, is that a lot of anti-Semites would lose "some of their best friends who are Jews." The genus Jew, as the target of their animosity, would be no more!

Similarly, in the new play, "Rain from Heaven," the playwright, S. N. Behrman, points out that if only one Jew were left in Germany, and he contemplated suicide, the Hitlerites would get down on their knees to persuade him to live, so that their programme of hate would not fall to pieces for want of a scapegoat. For lacking Jews, the Nazi ideology would have reached a "showdown;" with the last Jew out of Germany there would be none to blame if the Swastika millennium had not arrived!

An Austrian Jewish author named Bettauer some years ago wrote "The City Without Jews," with much the same idea. But the British journalist who discoursed on this provocative theme took his topic with mock seriousness and rightly pointed out that such a hypothetical Jewless world

"would spell impoverishment in the domain of the mind and the spirit."

One could go a step further, which indeed Hitlerism has sought to do, by trying to expunge all traces of the Jewish past as an influence on present-day "Aryan" culture. Carried to its logical extreme, the Nazi cult would compel God to resign; for even Hitler's Propaganda Minister has not been able to overcome the fact that Judaism gave Monotheism to the world.

Although sixteen million Jews are a mere handful in a world of more than sixteen hundred millions of humans, their impress cannot be eliminated in the already written annals of the past that chronicle the spiritual progress of mankind. As the British lecturer declared: "I am inclined to parody the old saying and exclaim that if there were no Jewish race it would be necessary for the Father of all to create one." Certain it is that if there were no Jews the arts and sciences—indeed the whole range of aspiration of the human spirit—would suffer from pernicious anaemia. True, it would then be a shirtless world; there would be no need for political shirtings, of whatever colour, to signalise the hate of the "enemies of mankind" or of the "inferior" creatures who are non-Nordic. But it would be shirtless for another reason—for the reason that human-kind will have sunk back to the edge of barbarity, with loin cloths and war-clubs as the apparel of the new vogue.
