

Zionist Socialist Party.

A public meeting was held at the Zionist Hall on Monday, 1st November, when the subject under discussion was "Soviet Russia and Zionism."

Mr. S. Abel (in the chair) stated that much misinformed, confused and ignorant thinking had prevailed in regard to the Zionist attitude to-wards Soviet Russia. Since the 1917 revolution the Soviet Government had based its policy upon fear of an attack on it by the capitalist powers, and had tended to isolate itself from the rest of the world, and insulate Russian Jewry from contact with its brethren. Its attitude had been that Russian Jewry had neither common cause nor identity of interest with the rest of Jewry. In Russian eyes, Britain was the citadel of capitalism and was considered as her main potential enemy. result of the Palestine Mandate being vested in Britain, Zionism was tarred with the same brush and was branded as merely a "tool of British Imperialism." Accordingly, Zionism was outlawed in Soviet Russia and Zionist Socialists languished in Soviet prison camps. Towards the languished in Soviet prison camps. Towards the end of 1941, when Moscow was in dire peril, Russian Jewry made an anguishing appeal to fellow Jewry for assistance. This was of great significance as marking a change in the Russian Government's attitude, particularly when one realised that all political activity in Russia was strictly controlled by the government.

Mr. Ch. Achron etatal activity in Russia was strictly controlled.

Mr. Ch. Achron stated that although the Yishuv had made overtures to Soviet Russia, our outstretched hand had not yet been grasped. Unfortunately, communists were making party capital out of the natural sympathy of Jewry towards Russia in its present position. An opinion prevailed that if we did not antagonise Soviet Russia or the communists, Zionism would get its deserved rewards. As Russia's future political trend was uncertain, it was difficult to accept this outlook, and it was therefore necessary to examine the past. The anti-Zionist attitude of the Russian Government was no incident; its leaders Russian Government was no incident; its leaders were well-informed and its attitude was not due to the influence of the Palestine Communist Party. Their original foreign policy was based upon the overthrow of western capitalism, and this explained their opposition to Zionism. There could only be a change in the Soviet attitude towards Zionism if there was a change in its international policy. There was still a Zionist Socialist movement in existence in Russia, and strong sentiments towards Zionism among the general Jewish population. population.

Mr. B. Padowich stated that we wished to for mr. B. Padowich stated that we wished to forget the past and start afresh in our relations with the Soviet. We greeted the heroic Red Army with unstinted admiration. He believed that the hand of Russian Jewry was held out to fellow Jewry in all sincerity. The Yishuv was the only progressive revolutionary factor in the Near East, and it was due to the Soviet political stratetry that its eyes were closed to this fact. It was natural that Zionism had not died altogether in Russia, although it had been atrophied to its maximum extent. The incorporation of almost two million of national-minded Jews in Russia would help considerably to dispel the ignorance of the Soviet authorities regarding the constructive achievements of the Yishuv.

Sea Point Massadah Association.

Close on a hundred people crowded in to the lounges of the Balmoral Hotel, Sea Point, on Monday evening, November 8th, when another meeting of the Sea Point Massadah Association took place. Mr. S. M. Miss L. Arens then gave an exceedingly interesting survey of current news topics which greatly impressed the audience. Two delightful songs were rendered by Miss Diana Lazar, accompanied by Miss Kantor.

The guest speaker of the evening was Dr. Abr. H. Jonker, editor of "Die Suiderstem," who chose as his subject "The Question of Race." He contended that in civilised society there was no such thing as a pure race. Discussing the subject not from the scientific but from the popular aspect, he went on to examine the reasons which keep people together, such as religion, language. geographical location and environment, and common interest, contending that none of these in itself explained the existence of separate groups. He maintained that nations kept their identity because they thought they were different or were thought to be different. In essence every one belonged to one universal brotherhood.

The address was followed by a keen discussion which lasted twice as long as the original lecture, centred mainly on Jewish nationhood and the re-lationship between Zionism and internationalism. Several members participated and some well-chosen remarks were made by Mrs. Jonker. Dr. Jonker, in his reply, affirmed his belief in Zionism, but maintained that anti-Semitism was primarily a problem for the non-Jews.
