These disorders, viz., bilious, liver, and other complaints, incident to a derangement of the stomach and alimentary ducts, which must always exist in such countries, and which exhibit themselves by a variety of symptoms, including oppression of the head and chest, depression of spirits, and in many instances, by those painfully distressing complaints, distensions, and nervous and spasmodic diseases of the vital organs, have, in every instance, when tried been effectually removed by this medicine.
