I have very good reason for believing that the colonization of New Caledonia has, for a long time past, been contemplated by the British Government...

There is an amicable ground upon which the occupation of New Caledonia by the French, for the bona fide purposes of colonization, can be resisted...

The British local authorities ought to have foreseen this movement of the French, and to have anticipated it; but there is such a terrible fear of incurring responsibility...

The remedy is a plain one. The long talked of settlement at Cape York should at once be formed to act as a pensioner post on the north, and the Fictus archipelago should be secured to Great Britain upon a principle of occupation similar to that upon which the United States of the Ionian Islands are held...

It is in the first place an extent of country some 600 or 700 miles in length stretching from the Carcarr district in the east along the Lachlan to the Murrumbidgee on the west...

But this is not the worst. It has been communicated to us upon unquestionable authority, and from various sources, that once fairly upon the river, every second house is a gin shop—not a place at which intoxicating liquor is sold on the sly, but a place where it is sold openly and without any attempt at concealment...

And we further declare, that should this measure be persisted in, without due time being afforded us to represent to the Home Government and British Parliament the amount of injury which will be inflicted upon us as early as we hold the British Government responsible for the liquidation of all claims which we have against the inhabitants of the said Orange River Sovereignty...
