Cape Town, January 20, 1857.

The telegraph wires were at the end of their length, and the last message from the Cape had been sent. The news from Saldanha was cheering, and the feeling all round was of confidence and hope. The settlers were anxious to get home, and the news of their success had come just in time to give them heart.

The Cape Town steamers were due to leave in a few days, and the excitement was great. The news from Saldanha was cheering, and the feeling all round was of confidence and hope. The settlers were anxious to get home, and the news of their success had come just in time to give them heart.
