

THE Zuid Afrikaan.

Cape Town, March 21, 1867.

SIR PHILIP AT HIS OLD TRICKS AGAIN.

There can be no doubt that the Imperial Government, in deciding upon the withdrawal of the troops from the South African Colonies, has been much influenced by the despatches of Sir Philip Wodehouse bearing upon that subject.

To us, in the Western Province, it matters very little whether there are two or three or half a dozen of regiments on our Frontier. Except from the Sea-board we are secure enough against any invasion from external enemies; and without supposing the slightest feeling of disloyalty to the Colonists, there are not a few among us that would feel, but little compunction even were the ties that bind us to England severed.

The Editor of the Standard, after rating the Governor in language which can not be misunderstood, expresses himself in the following terms: "Our part for the present will be to sit still, and if a deed of wrong is to be done, let the onus fall on the man who do it."

All be stern and effective. Better far, perhaps, for white man and black man that a moderating power should continue to stand between them; but if to her great duty England is untrue, events must shape themselves. The inferior race cannot be absorbed, it must either be subjected or expelled.

For all this the British Parliament is after all not so much to blame. One of the delegates we sent home to procure for us the inevitable boon of parliamentary Government, undertook the obligation of the defence of the Colony on condition of the concession of Representative Institutions.

Our London Correspondent's Letter. London, Feb. 9, 1867. The sole absorbing event of the month has been the opening of the Imperial Parliament which took place with rather more ceremony than has been the case for several years, inasmuch as the Queen went in state to the House of Lords.

The Editor of the Standard, after rating the Governor in language which can not be misunderstood, expresses himself in the following terms: "Our part for the present will be to sit still, and if a deed of wrong is to be done, let the onus fall on the man who do it."

To this Mr. Disraeli replied that he would do so on Monday. After a few preliminary observations on the importance of the question he pointed out the difficulty which every government had met with and insisted that it was hopeless to pass a Reform Bill if it was to be made any longer a political football.

The general belief is that the Government do not intend to bring in a Reform Bill on their own responsibility, and this belief is a good deal confirmed by the tone of Lord Derby's and Mr. Disraeli's speeches.

In contact with cattle. No packing case will be passed in which there is any hay or straw. For a long time past the practice of scuttling or destroying ships at sea for the purpose of defrauding the underwriters by obtaining premiums on fictitious cargoes has become a common one.

That very bigoted and obstinate body the Jamaica Committee whose pretensions are all the more prominent as it is absolutely self-elected, after having almost caused Governor Eyre to resign with a presentation, have at last proceeded to active steps.
