In the middle of the eighteenth century the seaman's dress was a small, low cocked hat, a pea-jacket, petticoat trousers (the short wide breeches resembling a kilt), a high buckled shoe. The hair was allowed to grow long, but was not powdered till a later date.

The officers had something approaching a distinctive uniform also. Gold-braided three-cornered hats; a blue sash to have been the accepted colour for coats. There had white facings ruffles with brass buttons. Underneath was a long white waistcoat, knee-breeches of white, with white stockings + buckled shoes were worn.
