New Yiddish Plays

Madame Sarah Sylvia, the celebrated Yiddish actress, is returning to His Majesty's Theatre on Monday, December 9, with two gripping new dramas that maintain the same high theatrical standard as her former successes. The first, "Souls for Sale," is singularly human and dramatic in interest, portraying Madame Sylvia herself in a colourful role. The religious aspect of Judaism plays a big part in the story, with its setting in New York.

The second play is as appealing and individual as "Souls for Sale," and in both these productions Madame Sylvia is supported by a strong local cast of talented players.

"O'SHAUGHNESSY'S BOY" AT THE METRO.

A story of circus life, starring Wallace Beery and Jackie Cooper, is the attraction at the Metro theatre this week. This is entitled "O'Shaughnessy's Boy", and Wallace Beery plays the part of an animal trainer, and Jackie, that of his son. After infinite patience, Louie Roth, world-famous animal trainer, filmed a tiger riding on an elephant's back through a ring of fire, and this makes a thrilling act for the film.
