"I Take This Woman" at the Metro

Hedy Lamarr, beautiful star of "Lady of the Tropics," is co-starred with that popular actor, Spencer Tracy in the new feature at the Metro Theatre this week. "I Take This Woman" is an unusual picture and gives both actors an opportunity of displaying their fine histrionic ability.

The supporting programme of shorts, news, and Archie Parkhouse at the Wurlitzer is delightful. The next attraction at this theatre, which commences on April 12, will be David O. Selznick's brilliant production in technicolour of "Gone With the Wind," Margaret Mitchell's popular novel.

The Empire Theatre, commencing this evening, presents a London film, "Forget Me Not," in which Beniamino Gigli, the world's greatest tenor, plays the leading role. ### "The Light That Failed" at the Colosseum

Ronald Colman heads the cast in the screen version of Rudyard Kipling's famous story "The Light that Failed," which is being shown at the Colosseum Theatre this week. The large supporting cast includes Ida Lupino, Muriel Angelus—a newcomer to the screen—Walter Huston, and numerous others. The picture provides drama, romance, and adventure to thrill all cinema patrons. The preliminary programme and Charles Manning and the Colosseum Orchestra is good.

"Code of the Streets" at the Plaza

Universal presents an excellent show, "Code of the Streets," at the Plaza Theatre this week. "The little tough guys"—another group of "dead end kids"—dominate the film, and indicate the code of honour existing among them. The rest of the programme which includes the latest topical news, shorts, and musical interlude on the Wurlitzer, is up to the usual high standard.
